

There was a girl that she wasn't afraid of nothing, but one night when she was sleeping, she heard a noise. It was the first night that they slept in that house. That house was an inheritance from her father's uncle. The girl thought that noise came from pipes and she slept again. But the girl heard another noise and she got up, she opened the door and shouted " help, help me " and she slammed the door, but the house was very big and nobody heard her.

In the morning, when her father came in the bedroom, his daughter was trembling under the bed. The girl told her father that happened last night. His father laughed at her and opened the door. Behind the door there was a white coat and a hat in the wardrobe. Then the girl was embarrassed for she was afraid of nothing.

Patricia V. Armesto 2º ESO